The seven-level stadium, which seats 63,000 for football, can also be reconfigured to seat 70,000 or more for NCAA basketball, the Super Bowl and concerts. It will cover 1.8 million square feet (over twice the size of Conseco Fieldhouse) and will also host NCAA Final Four and Regional men’s and women’s basketball games, major conventions, trade shows, IHSAA tournaments, national band competitions, local and national amateur sports events and events such as the annual Indiana Black Expo and Circle City Classic.

Developer

Lucas Oil Stadium is developed by the Indiana Stadium and Convention Building Authority (“the Authority”), a group of civic and business leaders appointed by the Governor of Indiana and the Mayor of Indianapolis.

Architect

The stadium is designed by HKS of Dallas, Texas, with significant assistance from local design firms such as A2SO4 and Browning Day Mullins Dierdorf of Indianapolis and other Indiana design and engineering consultants.

Construction Manager

The construction manager is Hunt Construction Group, Inc., of Indianapolis, assisted by the local firms of Smoot Construction and Mezzetta Construction. The project is constructed by dozens of trade contractors, mostly from Central Indiana.

Financing

The estimated stadium cost is approximately $720 million. It is being financed with funds raised jointly by the State of Indiana and the City of Indianapolis, with the Indianapolis Colts providing $100 million. Marion County has raised taxes for food and beverage sales, auto rental taxes, innkeeper’s taxes and admission taxes for its share of the costs. Meanwhile, a small increase in food and beverage taxes in six “donut” counties and the sale of Colts license plates completes the total.

Benefits

In addition to retaining the Colts in Indianapolis through a new long-term contract, the new stadium will pave the way for another expansion of the Indiana Convention Center to open in 2010. Taken together, these projects are expected to create $2.25 billion in economic benefit to Central Indiana in 10 years and
